Latest updates:

- Australia has 15 new coronavirus cases.
- Chief Medical Officer Brendan Murphy says social distancing measures, border restrictions and an aggressive public health response saved about 14,000 lives.
- Tensions rising over who permitted infected live export ship to dock in WA. Fremantle port workers may have been exposed to COVID-19 when they boarded the infected Al Kuwait that had apparently been cleared by a federal department to dock, despite knowing some of the crew were ill. Now questions are being asked why it was allowed to berth at an Australian port during a pandemic.

PM says job creation, not conditions, the focus of workplace reform

Prime Minister Scott Morrison has declined to confirm no worker will be worse off under workplace reform, saying the focus of his "JobMaker" talks between unions, employer organisations and government will be job creation.

"We are getting people together to work together ...this is a process that wants to see workers better off and employers better off, but mostly this is a process that wants to see more jobs," the Prime Minister told Sabra Lane on ABC radio this morning. In a heated interview, the Prime Minister called for employers, employees, political parties and the media to "put down the weapons", saying "we can't have those old debates anymore" when pressed on whether the talks would ultimately lead to worse conditions for workers.
